The Star's Platform

City
Apply the revenues of the municipal power plant to develop the industrial and social resources of Hope.
More city pavement in 1929, and improved sanitary conditions in the alleys and business back-yards.
Support the Chamber of Commerce.

County
A county highway program providing for the construction of a minimum amount of all-weather road each year, to gradually reduce the dirt road mileage.
Political and economic support for every scientific agricultural program which offers practical benefits to Hempstead county's greatest industry.
Encourage farmer organizations, believing that co-operative effort is as practical in the country as it is in town.

State
Continued progress on the state highway program.
Fearless tax reform, and a more efficient government through the budget system of expenditures.
Free Arkansas from the cattle tick.

After-Thoughts on the Festival.

THE magnetic hold which Hope and the Watermelon Festival have on the imagination of Western Arkansas was once more revealed as thousands of visitors poured in upon the city yesterday. It was a mammoth crowd, and the annual parade probably the finest in the history of the Festival.

Thanks of the city and county are due Wynne Denty and every man and woman who contributed to the Festival's success. Particular thanks should be forthcoming from the farm population of Hempstead county for whatever assistance has been given in the promotion of a better and more profitable watermelon market.

That was the obvious goal of the first Watermelon Festival, whose success is attested by the great crowds that throng here every year.

The effect of the annual Watermelon Festival has been to establish two facts in the mind of the nation: First, that they grow watermelons down in Hempstead county, Arkansas; and, second, that Hempstead county melons are the biggest and the best.

The Festival has advertised these facts all over America on the front page of a thousand newspapers—a position that money couldn't buy. The benefits of this advertising have accrued to the farmer—the actual watermelon producer. The benefits this year were extraordinarily large, we believe, the price being high and the demand very large.

It is obvious, therefore, that the older the Festival becomes as an annual spectacle the greater is our need for an organization of watermelon producers. For wherever a new and profitable enterprise is discovered it needs to be protected by its friends from unfair or dishonest exploitation. If Hempstead county has a famous reputation for watermelons, it needs an organization of growers to guarantee that the reputation will be always upheld.

The Star suggested last week that as soon as this year's Festival was over the watermelon growers ought to get together and form an alliance for the marketing of next year's crop. The farmer frequently suffers because of his suspicion of any organized effort—but there is no reason why industrial methods of marketing can't be adopted by agriculture. The citrus growers of California and Florida are highly organized, and it was farmer-organization that laid the basis for Wisconsin's dairy and poultry co-operatives.

Making Aviation Really Safe

NO matter how many "stunt" flights break old records—no matter how many aviators get across the ocean, or how many hours the refueling ships stay in the air—the average man will not be ready to trust himself unreservedly to the air until he feels that he will be just as safe in an airplane as he will be on the ground.

For this reason, the real advance in aviation nowadays is being made, not by the stunts—although their exploits have value—but by the regular, unsensational, day-in-and-day-out achievements of the commercial pilots.

A short time ago a newspaper reporter traveled from Los Angeles to New York by the air-rail hookup of Transcontinental Air Transport and the Santa Fe and Pennsylvania railroads. Here's a paragraph from his story of the trip, which points plainly to the sort of thing that is bringing aviation closer and closer to the realm of every-day affairs.

"Weather reports," he wrote, "told us there were storms between Winslow, Ariz., and Albuquerque. We took off anyway, but our two pilots talked with ground stations ahead and behind us by radio, and knew just where the storms were. So we simply flew around them. . . . The Albuquerque weather report told of three storms converging to the eastward, so we had to detour again, but we sped around them quickly in the midst of lightning and rain and reached Clovis, N. M., before dark, which the pilot had not expected to do."

Bad weather is the one great hazard which keeps the commercial airplane from being 100 per cent safe. Now, with the aid of an elaborate organization, the aviation companies are learning how to rob it of its terrors. When this system is carried out a little bit farther, so that ever prospective airplane passenger can be assured that the plane is not going to run into any fogs or storms, the commercial aviation business is going to make tremendous advances.

Wheat Pool Aids Canada

The largest organization of its kind in the world, the Canadian Wheat Pool, is handling one-fifth of the world's wheat supply and is bringing prosperity to its 133,000 farmer-owners in Canada's wheat raising district. Last year this organization handled 222,908,000 bushels of wheat at a turnover of $325,000,000. A typical country grain elevator, of which more than 1400 are functioning in Canada, is shown here. Farmers bring their grain to such elevators, from which it is shipped to huge central elevators. E. B. Ramsey, general manager of the pool, is shown in the insert.

It is suggested that all bids be based on form of construction and grades of material named in specifications; and that costs for different grades of lumber and kinds of foundation be given on sheet attached to bid. All bids (considered) must be in the office of the County Superintendent by five p. m. Saturday, July 27th.

The RAINING TALENT

By ELEANOR EARLY © 1926 BY NEA Service Inc.

THIS HAS HAPPENED Molly Burnham, in the midst of a turbulent career, goes alone to Italy. Her adventures are many and exciting. From Naples, she travels to Rome, and then to Venice.

Later she goes to Florence, and buys her sweetheart, Jack Wells, a fascinating ring from an old silver smith on Ponte Vecchio. Returning happily, to the pension where she is staying, she receives a cable. Tearing it open rather feebly, Molly falls at the feet of Signorina Benvenuto, mistress of the pension. For the first time in her life, she has fainted.

Now Go On With the Story CHAPTER XXVII

Servants came running when Signorina Benvenuto called. Signorina chafed Molly's cold hands, and pressed brandy between her lips. And, when she could not be revived, they carried her to a divan in the living room; and the concierge went on his bicycle for a doctor.

Then Signorina Benvenuto relieved the cable that had fluttered from Molly's stiff fingers.

"RITA DEAD," it read "IN SISTER DURING CONSCIOUSNESS THAT YOU BE NOTIFIED IMMEDIATELY. BOB."

Tears came to the Italian lady's eyes. Her sympathetic Latin nature responded readily to the grief of any living thing, and for the little American girl traveling alone she wept sincerely.

Molly stirred, and her eyelids fluttered.

"I have great sorrow for you Signorina," murmured the mistress of the pension. "I have read your message, and weep my grief."

Molly stared with unseeing eyes.

The concierge had returned with the doctor. And the murmur of anxious voices penetrated her consciousness. She raised herself on her elbow. Everything was clear now. She remembered the cable and realized she had fainted.

"My best friend is dead," she said, "and I must go home immediately, to take care of her baby. I hope I didn't frighten you. It was a dreadful shock."

Signorina nodded understandingly.

"To be sure," she murmured. "A dreadful shock. I shed tears myself."

She wiped her eyes.

"The bambino?" she asked. "You will be mama to the little bambino?"

"I promised my friend," exclaimed Molly, "that if she died, I would take her little girl. She was ill then. But I never realized the end was so near. She did not seem very sick. I never dreamed..." Molly's voice broke.

"Sometimes it is better," consoled the older woman, "when death comes quickly. God knows best. May He have mercy on her soul."

Molly nodded through her tears.

and she must keep it. Before very long she would be forgotten. And, after that, she would have to start all over again.

Mr. Durbin had written, urging that she begin work on another play. "The Death of Delphine Darrows" had proved the sustained hit of the season. He seemed willing to take a chance on almost anything Molly might write.

"But don't sweetie-pie on me," he warned. "The public has you tagged as a girl who knows her crime. Lou can't pull any love-among-the-daisies stuff on them."

How about a nice, juicy murder?"

Molly had torn up his letter impatiently. She did not want to be tagged as a girl who knew her crime. Better love-among-the-daisies than a "nice juicy murder!"

No, crushed with grief by Rita's death, confronted with the prospect of a long and unbearable lonely voyage, she decided to devote the entire trip to the task of writing another play. For some time she had revolved in her mind the dramatic possibilities of a tragedy of young love—the sympathetic study of a modern thrill-seeking.

Life had furnished all the characters. The tragedy had taken place while Molly was in college. In real life, the inglorious hero had been murdered.

For the purpose of a play, she would have him commit suicide—in a sacrifice to honor and chivalry. But, until the last moment, the audience must believe him murdered. Even the defendants, and his sweetheart, must believe him murdered.

The plot should revolve about the love of mother and daughter—each ready to give her life, to save the other—each believing the other guilty of murder.

A freshman in college had fallen in love with a man whom her parents considered unworthy. Learning of the romance, her father had gone to the boy.

There was a stormy session, during which the youth declared that the girl was pursuing him, that she had thrown herself at his head, and that whatever happened was her own fault.

The next day the mother of the girl bought a revolver. Two days later the boy's body was found. He had gone to grove, presumably to keep a tryst with the girl. There was a bullet through his head, and, beside his body, was the revolver purchased by the girl's mother.

Both parents were subsequently arrested, and tried for murder. There was a tremendous furor, with the press screaming for conviction.

Molly's sympathies were with the parents. She saw them as two wretched creatures, with hearts broken and minds crazed, condemned to witness the inevitable disgrace and misery of their cherished child.

But the press saw only two unrelenting, misunderstanding parents, determined to sacrifice love's young dream on the altar of their selfish ambition for their child. Two fiends with no conception of the idyll of romance.

Molly knew better. The man was an utterly unmoral person. And the girl a susceptible and willing creature. She could quite understand how the agonized mother had been tormented by reason.

It was, of course, a sensational case. Eventually the mother was committed to prison convicted of "knowledge before and after the crime."

Molly decided to introduce her play with a courtroom scene. The courtroom action in "The Death of Delphine Darrows" had been an outstanding success. It might be well to pattern a bit on that.

She could open with the joint trial of the parents. And, in the witness box, she would place the girl, grieving for the death of her sweetheart ready to give testimony against her mother.

A suave prosecuting attorney would ask his damning questions quietly. Suddenly the girl would shatter the breathless quiet of the courtroom.

Thumping her chest with her clenched fists, she would cry, "I did it! I. I. I!"

And then—the dramatic scene formed itself in Molly's mind—the mother, in the prisoner's cage, would rise to her feet. And she would turn to the jury, and implore them:

Don't believe her! It's not the truth. She's lying. It was I, her mother!"

That, Molly decided, was as good as anything in Delphine Darrows. The curtain would come down on the mother's denial. That would get the play off on a note of mystery. The following acts would have to be worked up. The idea had great possibilities. She was sure of that. Greater scene than "The Death of Delphine Darrows."

Molly worked every day and half the nights. It was only by keeping terrifically busy, that she could forget the haunting tragedy of Rita's death. Only by becoming physically and mentally exhausted, could she sleep at all. Utterly weary, she would throw herself across her bed at two or three o'clock in the morning. At daylight, the deck hands, when they came to swab the decks, would waken her. Then she would get to work again. To keep her mind active she drank a great quantity of black coffee.

When the Conte Grande reached New York, the new play was finished. And Molly was an utter wreck. She had lost 10 pounds in as many days, and looked 10 years older. But the play, neatly typed, lay in her traveling case. She would send it, by messenger from the pier to Durbin. He could get in touch with her later in Boston.

Red, exercising the privileges of the press, boarded the steamer with the doctors at quarantine. He had heard, in the peculiar fashion of newspaper men, of Rita's death, and had called on Bob, to express his sympathy. From Bob he learned of Molly's promise to care for little Rita, and learned also that Molly was returning on the Conte Grande.

He greeted her in characteristic fashion.

"Woman, what you been doing to yourself? You look like hell."

"That's the way I feel," she told him. "Wasn't it dreadful about Rita?"

"Tough," he sympathized. "Awful tough. What's this I hear about you taking the kid?"

"I promised Rita," she explained.

"I saw her. Awful cute kid. You didn't agree to take on the rest of the family, did you?"

Molly smiled faintly.

"Bob?" she asked. "Poor Bob! How is he, Red?"

"Bearing up," drawled Red. "Bearing up pretty well, I should say. He's got a frowsy little dame to keep him company."

"Red!"

"Sure thing," he insisted. "She's back over his shoulder, in a perplexed sort of fashion. He wore a mourning band on the sleeve of his gray suit, and a black tie. He took her hand in both of his. And she saw that there were tears in his mild blue eyes. Despite the frowsy lady—despite whatever he might have done—she felt overwhelmingly sorry for him.

"It's strange," he stammered. "Very strange. Jack was here a moment ago. He seems to have disappeared."

Professional pugilism in Mexico said to be gaining in popularity. If the boxing situation down there is anything like that north of the Rio Grande, that's a sure sign that the country has settled down.

TRANSPORTATION AND THE PART IT PLAYS IN THE MACHINE AGE

ANALYSIS of our so-called "Machine Age" civilization would require volumes, but it can be summarized in a few words. The average citizen today enjoys, as a matter of course, ordinary daily necessities that were beyond the reach or even the dreams of Egyptian Pharaohs, the Greeks in their "palmyest" days, or Roman senators in the hey-day of their ascendancy.

These things are made possible as a result of mass production by the use of machinery—power driven—and our system of communication and distribution which is, of itself, more marvelous than any development of our present-day, complex scheme of things. And that distribution has been made possible by and absolutely is dependent upon our railroads.

In any final analysis we come back to first principles. Without the railroads our frontiers could not have been extended, vast reaches of our country could not have been developed—our rural populations, at great distances from the centers of industrial production, could not have enjoyed the benefits of this mass production, and our great industrial population centers could not have been supplied with even the raw materials of manufacture, to say nothing of food from our farms and the basic commodities for clothing and shelter.

More than that, if specific examples are sought we need only look at the spectacle of California products competing with Texas and Florida in New York, and Florida products successfully competing with those of other sections in the middle west and north, while those of Texas compete successfully at the very doorsteps of both California and Florida. All this is possible wholly and solely because of our railroad transportation.

All of this progress and amazing development—our "Machine Age" civilization—is based primarily on widespread general prosperity and the prosperity of each region, community and group is vitally dependent on railroad transportation. General prosperity is dependent on purchasing power and that, in turn, again, is dependent on adequate and dependable transportation by rail.

The railroads are willingly and gladly carrying their full share of the burden and cheerfully contributing a full measure of their quota to the whole situation. They expect to continue to do this. And to this end—

I solicit your co-operation and support.

Many Ways to Fame

Phil Scott, the huge English heavyweight, first came into prominence in this country when he was knocked out by Knute Hansen. He went home to London, but got back into print when he became involved in the complicated affairs of Max Schmeling, der German heavyweight. Der Schmeling had been signed to fight Scott and tried to get out of it and the New York commission said he would have to fight Scott or he couldn't fight in New York.

Pounds A Wicked Typewriter

Big Phil turned author in his spare time, and the following is one of his masterpieces in a London paper:

Knocked Down In Rush

One incident came as something of a shock to me. I had been detailed with another man for shore duty at Dumfries, in Scotland, where a lot of American sailors were on leave.

One of our duties was to see that civilians were in no way molested; for instance, that they should be allowed to board tram cars first.

Now I have always found Americans, particularly the Marines, the soundest of fellows. Some Yankee sailors, however, seemed to be

been drinking, and when a tram

car going to the Castle drew up, they made a rush to board it. Unfortunately, a woman with a child in her arms became involved in the scramble, and was knocked down.

My companion and I hurried forward, but were too late to stop the rush. Most of the sailors had reached the top deck and were comfortably seated, but the conductor of the car knew his orders and refused to start until they all got out again. This they refused to do, and there was no room for anyone else.

Out of a Job

A vision of the woman being knocked down once before me. I suppose I saw red. Anyway, I went on top of that car and threw the whole lot of them over the side, where they fell in heaps. One man was caught upside down on the rail, and a great scramble ensued below for the money which fell out of his pockets!

Afterwards it occurred to me that I must be possessed of remarkable strength, and I threw myself even more enthusiastically into the strict training of which I was so fond.

Before long my name had become known a little as a boxer in the Forces, and I certainly was very fond of the sport. The war came to an end, however, and I was not only out of the Marines, but, like thousands of others, out of a job. I looked around a little, and finally joined the police force, although I stayed there only a short time. The life of a fireman appealed to me more, and I changed over to the London fire brigade.

No one can imagine a finer body of men than the brigade, and I have always been moved to admiration at the way in which they take on the most hazardous of jobs without turning a hair. It needs more nerve, you know, to play a hose from the top of a high wall than is cracking beneath you than to go into the most desperate boxing contest.

All Firemen Are Game!

After Scott had been knocked out by Hansen and beaten by Johnny Risko the boys in the back rooms said that he was timid. And when they said timid they meant something else. Scott comments on that angle in his article as follows:

I have been accused of lethargy,

slowness and even of cowardice, knowing that all these charges are untrue. What does it matter? I believe that a boxer should be able to defeat his man scientifically, with as little brute force as possible. The days of prize fighting, of sheer "slogging," are fortunately long past—otherwise I should not be in the ring, for that sort of thing does not appeal to me.

I should like, though, to meet the men who accuse me of being "afraid"—if only they were the stuff of which firemen are made.

DID YOU KNOW THAT—

The sleuths discovered that Joe Dundee bet $5000 on himself to beat Jackie Fields—With the provision that the fight didn't end in a foul—And the smart guys say that anyone who took a bet like that ought to be taken like a sucker—They say that the Jints are not doing so well because McGraw has been riding them all over the lot—And that one of the players already has been fined one grand for mistakes made on the field—Floyd Fitzsimmons, the customers say, has the finest fight arena in the country in Detroit—Johnny Farrell's friends want him to quit golf for a year and go west—Pearing he has lung trouble—The Cubs are almost certain to make a new attendance record this year.

Matlock Takes Decision Over Leavelle In Twelve Inning Set-To

'Fast Black,' New Orleans Boxer Wasn't Fast Enough for Johnny Hall, Little Rock Negro Who Is Coming to the Front In His Weight.

Fans who attended the Festival boxing show at Fair Park last night got their money's worth and then some for promoters had carded a little of everything that goes to make the boxing game exciting and interesting. It was the first open-air show this season, was witnessed by a good crowd and indications that these out-door exhibitions will prove popular.

As the curtain-raiser "Kik" Bradley, Smackover and "Young" Simpson, of Hope, stepped a fast five rounds, showing plenty of action, and staking visitors to a good show, Bradley was awarded the decision, he taking three of the five rounds, one a draw and one going to Simpson by a wide margin.

"Gas Baiting" Terry, Prescott, and Battling Siki, of El Dorado were slated to travel eight frames and the battle started with the going. It was give and take with honors probably going to Siki until late in the third Terry split a wide gash over his opponents' eye, the flow of blood blinding him to an extent forcing the stopping of the fight by the referee in the fourth.

"Preacher" Walker and "Kid" Jenkins, former of Hope and the latter of Little Rock, put on an eight-round fracas worth going a long way to see. Jenkins opened the fracas by taking the first round by a wide margin, drawing the second and taking the third. Then the "Preacher" woke up, however, and from then to the final going it was a case of fast fist work with thionors mostly to the Hope boy. It was a rattling good exhibition.

Jack Lewis, Memphis negro

scheduled to meet Johnny Hall, failed to show and "Fast Black," a New Orleans boxer, was substituted. He out-weighted Hall by several pounds—but all that did was to make him fall the harder when the little flash from the Missouri Pacific shops in Little Rock found an opening for as-wicked a left hook as has been seen in many boxing seasons.

Then the main event, Matlock

and Leavelle going the 12-round route, Matlock gaining the unanimous decision of the judges. Leavelle met the older man on his own ground and it was a give-and-take affair. Matlock was cautioned by the referee to watch low blows, and in the last round Leavelle gave a demonstration of true sportsmanship. Matlock had hit low again, a vicious left, bringing a grimace of pain to Leavelle's face. The referee stepped in but Leavelle promptly declared he knew the foul was not intentional and asked the bout go on. He lost the decision but he made friends by his evident love of fair play and clean sport.

Stribling-Fay Bout On Monday Night To Draw Big Attendance

Hope Fans Plan To Take In Show At Capitol—Matlock and Ashton To Mix In Semi-Final To Biggest Card Ever Staged In Arkansas.

HOPE SPRINGS, Aug. 9.—Ed die Barnsbuck, local promoter, who staged for the Legionnaires of Little Rock the biggest boxing event ever held in Arkansas, a 10-round fight between Young Stribling of Macon, Ga., and Harry Fay, of Louisville, N. Y., left yesterday for Little Rock, to be on hand to welcome the two fistic celebrities when they land at the Little Rock airport. Both Stribling and Fay are flying to the scene of their Monday night's encounter.

Stribling who owns his own plane, was due there yesterday and Fay, who took a trans-continental plane from New York to St. Louis, and who expects to also fly the remainder of the distance, is due in the Capital city not later than this evening, Barnsbuck said.

"In the event Fay can not get a plane out of St. Louis or connect with some one in that city flying this way, he, of course, will have to come by train, but, like Stribling he has become a bug on aviation and will try and make the entire trip by air."

Barnsbuck also said that advance sale of tickets already had passed the $1,500 mark and that he and others interested in the bout anticipate a record crowd will pour through the gates of Kavanaugh field next Monday night to see this fuss. Three other 10-round bouts also will be on the program.

Stribling has been invited, Barnsbuck stated, to occupy a suite of two rooms at the Albert Pike hotel, and the Marion also has extended the same courtesy to Fay. The latter will be accompanied by Charles Rose, his manager.

Barnsbuck, while in Little Rock also will arrange for Stribling's visit to this city Sunday. He will fly to the Spa and Sunday night

COL. EDWARD R. BRADLEY'S great three-year-old, Blue Larkspur, has an excellent chance to finish the current racing season as the greatest money-winning horse of all time.

When he won the $60,000 American classic recently, his earnings reached the mark of $220,420 and put him into sixth place among the outstanding money-winning thoroughbreds of racing animals.

The horses that still stand in front of the great son of Black Servant and Blossom Time are Zev, Exterminator, Man o' War, Display and Sarazen. Zev's total of $313,630 has long been regarded as one that would stand for a long time to come, but with the Bradley horse eligible to race for $250,000 more before the summer ends, it seems only injuries or failures to enter in the races will keep him from the top.

Zev's record-breaking mark was made in 1927 and 1928, although he figured in a few cheap purses as a four-year-old in 1924. Match races with Papyrus and In Memoriam helped to swell the total.

Blue Larkspur's winnings to date are all the more remarkable when you consider he has started in only 13 races since he left Col. Bradley's pleasant meadows for the paddock. Zev went to the post 43 times, Exterminator started 100 times and the unbeaten Colin had to face the barrier on 15 occasions to hang up the $180,000 mark, which is far below Blue Larkspur's present figure.

The rich stakes to which Blue Larkspur is eligible, victories in which would send his earnings skyrocketing above Zev's, are the Travers Mid-Summer Derby at Saratoga, the Lawrence Realization and Gold Cup at Belmont and the Latonia championship stakes at Latonia.

All of the big money winners on the list except Blue Larkspur and Display have been retired from racing.

"DEVELOPING NATURAL RESOURCES" The Story of NATURAL GAS

THE FORERUNNERS!

Believing that you as a consumer of natural gas will be interested in learning how the fuel reaches you, and how many steps are required for the maintenance of perfect service, we are beginning a series of advertisements depicting this in brief, dynamic form.

LONG months before the first drilling operations are started geologists and lease buyers are busy selecting the land and leasing holdings. An element of chance enters into this part of the work, as many of the wells to be drilled may prove to be "dry holes."

These are as important factors in supplying you with natural gas as the plumbing in your home. While this work seems rather far removed from the preparation of your evening meal, it is the first of a long series of processes essential to the bringing of natural gas to you.

Screen Actors Work As Crew On Submarine

Jack Holt, Ralph Graves and director Frank Capra spent three days aboard a submarine learning the routine before a single scene of Columbia's "Submarine" which is coming to the Saenger Theater on Friday and Saturday, was taken.

They lived the lives of sailors and submitted to the rigid discipline of the navy for twenty-four hours a day. No privileges other than the intensive training were accorded them.

During the three days they acquired a working knowledge of the mechanism which drives the under sea vessels and the other conditions under which a crew works.

Office Boy Saves Honor of His Boss

16-Year-Old Lad Refuses To "Sell Out" Associated Press.

NEW YORK, Aug. 8.—The honesty of Harold Harris, 16-year-old Associated Press office boy, uncovered and defeated yesterday an attempt to falsify clearing house figures posted in the New York Clearing House.

Because Harold would not "sell his boss out" two men were in jail tonight charged with attempted bribery.

The police game in which yesterday's coup was attempted is based on combinations of numerals taken from two figures posted every day at the clearing house—the exchanges and the balances.

It is played the world over—all over the United States, in South America and in Europe. It is said to be bigger in this country than the baseball pool. Huge sums of money sometimes change hands.

Harold's job every day is to go down to the clearing house just before noon, copy the figures off a sheet posted there, and take them to the Associated Press Wall Street bureau. All the New York newspapers and the other news agencies have office boys or reporters who do the same thing.

Tuesday as he was leaving the clearing house with the figures, Harold says, two men stepped up to him, showed him $75 and said it would be his if he would telephone to his boss the numbers they gave him instead of those he had copied off the sheet.

Harold refused.

"Well, all right, but you'll get into trouble anyway," one of them said after they had argued with him for some time. "All the other boys are fixed. Their numbers will agree and yours won't. You just wait."

That got Harold worried. So when he got back to the office he told what had happened.

The result was that when Harold went after those figures yesterday he was accompanied by two police detectives and a man from the Wall Street bureau of the Associated Press. They waited in the office while Harold went in and copied the figures. As he came out a man stepped up to him and said:

"The guy with the money is right across the street."

The detectives thereupon arrested Nathan Felington and Lawrence Sackman. Police said that Felington and Sackman told them they were employed by a negro named Williams, who operates a policy game in Harlem, and they had in their possession a roll of bills that totaled exactly $75.

Yesterday's correct figures, but by the Associated Press were: Exchanges, $1482,000,000; balance, $132,000,000.

The "fake figures," sent out by nearly everybody else, were: Exchanges, $1,478,000,000; balances, $183,000,000.
